Students, teachers, artists, and members of the general public may download and distribute this document (in whole or in part) without permission and without charge. They may also edit or adapt it to suit their purposes. However, commercial publication in any form is not permitted without the consent of the translator (ian.johnston@viu.ca).

In the following text the numbers in square brackets refer to the Greek text (available at Perseus), and the numbers without brackets refer to the English text. Partial lines are normally included with an adjacent partial line in the reckoning. The stage directions and footnotes have been provided by the translator.

In this translation, possessives of words ending in -s are usually indicated in the common way (that is, by adding ’s (e.g. Zeus and Zeus’s)). This convention adds a syllable to the spoken word (the sound -iz). Sometimes, for metrical reasons, this English text indicates such possession in an alternate manner, with a simple apostrophe. This form of the possessive does not add an extra syllable to the spoken name (e.g., Bacchus and Bacchus’ are both two-syllable words; whereas, Bacchus’s has three syllables).

There is an important gap of 50 lines or more in Euripides’s manuscript between lines 1329 and 1330 of the Greek text. The content of the missing lines is fairly well known, so this translation has attempted to provide a reconstructed text for the missing portion (lines 1645 to 1699 of the English text). That reconstructed text appears between square brackets.
Euripides (c. 480 to 406 BC) was an Athenian tragic dramatist. Of his approximately ninety-five plays only nineteen have survived. The Bacchae was his final play, written when Euripides had left Athens and moved to the royal court of Macedon. It was first produced in 405 BC, a year after the playwright’s death.

Dramatis Personae

DIONYSUS: divine son of Zeus and Semele, also called Bromius or Bacchus TIRESIAS: an old blind prophet CADMUS: grandfather of both Dionysus and Pentheus, an old man
PENTHEUS: young king of Thebes, grandson of Cadmus, cousin of Dionysus
AGAVE: mother of Pentheus, daughter of Cadmus, sister of Semele
FIRST MESSENGER: a cattle herder
SECOND MESSENGER: an attendant on Pentheus
CHORUS OF BACCHAE: worshippers of Dionysus who have followed him from Asia, also called Maenads or Bacchants.
SOLDIERS and ATTENDANTS around Pentheus.

[Scene: the Greek city of Thebes, outside the royal palace. Dionysus, appearing as young man, is alone, with the palace behind him, its main doors facing the audience. He speaks directly to the audience.]

DIONYSUS

I have arrived here in the land of Thebes,
I, Dionysus, son of Zeus, born to him from Semele, Cadmus’ daughter, delivered by a fiery midwife—Zeus’s lightning flash.¹
Yes, I’ve changed my form from god to human, appearing here at these streams of Dirce,
the waters of Ismarus. I see my mother’s tomb—for she was wiped out by that lightning bolt.
It’s there, by the palace, with that rubble,
the remnants of her house, still smoldering from Zeus’s living fire—Hera’s undying outrage against my mother. But I praise Cadmus.
He’s made his daughter’s shrine a sacred place.
I have myself completely covered it with leafy shoots of grape-bearing vines.

¹Zeus’s affair with Semele aroused the anger of Hera, Zeus’s wife. She tricked Zeus into striking Semele with his divine lightning. Dionysus was removed from his mother’s womb as she was dying and sewn into Zeus’s thigh, where he continued to grow until he was delivered as a newborn infant.
I’ve left the fabulously wealthy East, lands of Lydians and Phrygians, Persia’s sun-drenched plains, walled towns in Bactria. I’ve moved across the bleak lands of the Medes, through rich Arabia, all Asian lands, along the salt-sea coast, through those towns with their beautifully constructed towers, full of barbarians and Greeks all intermingled. Now I’ve come to Thebes, city of Greeks, only after I’ve set those eastern lands dancing in the mysteries I established, making known to men my own divinity. Thebes is the first city of the Greeks where I’ve roused people to shout out my cries, with this deerskin draped around my body, this ivy spear, a thyrsus, in my hand.¹

For my mother’s sisters have acted badly, something they, of all people, should avoid. They boasted aloud that I, Dionysus, was no child of Zeus, claiming Semele, once she was pregnant by some mortal man, attributed her bad luck in bed to Zeus, a story made up (they said) to trick Cadmus. Those sisters state that is why Zeus killed her, because she lied about the man she’d slept with. So I’ve driven those women from their homes in a frenzy—they now live in the mountains, out of their minds. I’ve made them put on costumes, outfits appropriate for my mysteries. All Theban offspring—or, at least, all women—I’ve driven in a crazed fit from their homes. Now they sit out there among the rocks, underneath green pine trees, no roof overhead, Cadmus’ daughters in their company as well. For this city has to learn, though against its will, that it has yet to be initiated into my Dionysian rites. Here I plead the cause of my own mother, Semele,

¹The thyrsus is a plant stalk used in the Bacchic ceremonies, where it can acquire magical properties, especially as a weapon.
appearing as a god to mortal men, the one she bore to Zeus. Now Cadmus, the old king, has just transferred his power, his royal authority, to Pentheus, his daughter’s son, who, in my case at least, fights against the gods, prohibiting me all sacrificial offerings. When he prays, he chooses to ignore me. For this neglect I’ll demonstrate to him, to all in Thebes, that I was born a god. Once these things here have been made right, I’ll move on somewhere else, to some other land, revealing who I am. But if Thebans in this city, in their anger, try to make those Bacchic women leave, to drive them from the mountains forcibly, then I, commander of these maenads, will fight them.¹ That’s why I’ve transformed myself, assumed a mortal shape, altered my looks, so I resemble any human being.

[Enter the Chorus of Bacchae, dressed in ritual deerskin, carrying small drums like tambourines.]

But you there, you women who’ve left Tmolus, backbone of Lydia, my band of worshippers, whom I’ve led here from barbarian lands, my comrades on the road and when we rest, take up your drums, those instruments of yours from Phrygian cities, first invented by mother Rhea and myself. Move round here, beat those drums by Pentheus’s palace, let Cadmus’ city see you, while I go, in person, to the clefts of Mount Cithaeron, to my Bacchae, to join in their dancing.²

[Exit Dionysus.]

¹The Bacchic women are followers of Dionysus. The word maenad also refers to his ecstatic female worshippers.
²Tmolus is a mountain in Asia Minor associated with Dionysus. Phrygia is a region in Asia Minor near the coast. Rhea is the mother of Zeus. Mount Cithaeron is a sacred mountain near Thebes.
BACCHAE

CHORUS [singing and dancing]

FIRST VOICE
From Asia, from sacred Tmolus I’ve come to dance, to move swiftly in my dance—for Bromius—
sweet and easy task,
to cry out in celebration,
hailing great god Bacchus. 90

SECOND VOICE
Who is in the street? Who’s there? Who?
Let him stay inside
out of our way.
Let every mouth be pure, [70] completely holy,
speak no profanities.
In my hymn I celebrate our old eternal custom, hailing Dionysus.

THIRD VOICE
O blessed is the man, 100
the fortunate man who knows the rituals of the gods,
who leads a pious life,
whose spirit merges
with these Bacchic celebrations, frenzied dancing in the mountains,
our purifying rites—one who reveres these mysteries from Cybele, our great mother, who, waving the thyrsus,
forehead crowned with ivy, serves Dionysus. 110 [80]

FOURTH VOICE
On Bacchae! Bacchae, move!
Bring home Bromius, our god,
son of god, great Dionysus,
BACCHAE

from Phrygian mountains to spacious roads of Greece—Hail Bromius!

FIFTH VOICE
His mother dropped him early,
as her womb, in forceful birth pangs, 120 was struck by Zeus’s flying lightning bolt,
a blast which took her life.
Then Zeus, son of Cronos,
at once hid him away
in a secret birthing chamber, buried in his thigh,
shut in with golden clasps, concealed from Hera.

SIXTH VOICE
Fates made him perfect.
Then Zeus gave birth to him, 130 [100]
the god with ox’s horns, crowned with wreaths of snakes—
that’s why the maenads twist in their hair
wild snakes they capture.

SEVENTH VOICE
O Thebes, nursemaid of Semele, put on your ivy crown,
flaunt your green yew,
flaunt its sweet fruit!
Consecrate yourselves to Bacchus, with stems of oak or fir, 140 [110]
Dress yourselves in spotted fawn skins, trimmed with white sheep’s wool.
As you wave your thyrsus, revere the violence it contains.
All the earth will dance at once.
Whoever leads our dancing—
that one is Bromius!
To the mountain, to the mountain,
where the pack of women waits,
all stung to frenzied madness to leave their weaving shuttles, goaded on by Dionysus.

EIGHTH VOICE
O you dark chambers of the Curetes, you sacred caves in Crete,
birthplace of Zeus,
where the Corybantes in their caves, men with triple helmets, made for me this circle of stretched hide.¹
In their wild ecstatic dancing, they mixed this drum beat with the sweet seductive tones of flutes from Phrygia, then gave it to mother Rhea to beat time for the Bacchae,
when they sang in ecstasy.
Nearby, orgiastic satyrs,
in ritual worship of the mother goddess, took that drum, then brought it into their biennial dance, bringing joy to Dionysus.

NINTH VOICE
He’s welcome in the mountains, when he sinks down to the ground,
after the running dance,
wrapped in holy deerskin,
hunting the goat’s blood,
blood of the slain beast,
devouring its raw flesh with joy, rushing off into the mountains,
in Phrygia, in Lydia, leading the dance—
Bromius—Evoë!

¹The Curetes and Corybantes were attendants on Rhea. They danced and made music in order to hide the infant cries of Dionysus from Hera, Zeus’s wife.
ALL
The land flows with milk,
the land flows with wine,
the land flows with honey from the bees.
He holds the torch high,
our leader, the Bacchic One,
blazing flame of pine,
sweet smoke like Syrian incense, trailing from his thyrsus.
As he dances, he runs,
here and there,
rousing the stragglers,
stirring them with his cries,
thick hair rippling in the breeze.
Among the Maenads’ shouts
his voice reverberates:
“On Bacchants, on!
With the glitter of Tmolus,
which flows with gold,
chant songs to Dionysus,
to the loud beat of our drums.
Celebrate the god of joy with your own joy, with Phrygian cries and shouts!
When sweet sacred pipes play out their rhythmic holy song, in time to the dancing wanderers,
then to the mountains,
on, on to the mountains.”
Then the bacchanalian woman is filled with total joy—like a foal in pasture right beside her mother—
her swift feet skip in playful dance.

[Enter Tiresias, a very old blind man, dressed in clothing appropriate for the Dionysian ritual. He goes up to the palace door and knocks very aggressively.]

TIRESIAS [shouting] Where’s the servant on the door? You in there, tell Cadmus to get himself out of the house,
Agenor's lad, who came here from Sidon, then put up the towers of this Theban town.¹ Go tell him Tiresias is waiting for him. He knows well enough why I've come for him. I'm an old man, and he's even older, but we've agreed make ourselves a thyrsus, to put on fawn skins and crown our heads with garlands of these ivy branches.

[Enter Cadmus from the palace, a very old man, also dressed in clothing appropriate for the Dionysian ritual.]

CADMUS

My dearest friend,
I was inside the house. I heard your voice.
I recognized it—the voice of a man truly wise.
So I've come equipped with all this god stuff.
We must sing his praise, as much as we can, for this Dionysus is my daughter's child.
Now he's revealed himself a god to men.
Where must I go and dance? Where do I get to move my feet and shake my old gray head?
You must guide me, Tiresias, one old man leading another, for you're the expert here.
O I'll never tire of waving this thyrsus, day and night, striking the ground. What rapture!
Now we can forget that we're old men.

TIRESIAS
You feel the same way I do, then.
For I'm young and going to try the dancing.

CADMUS
Shall we go up the mountain in a chariot?

TIRESIAS
The god would not then get complete respect.

¹Cadmus had come from Asia Minor, sent out from home by his father, and founded Thebes.
BACCHAE

CADMUS
  So I'll be your nursemaid—one old man will take charge of another one?

TIRESIAS
    The god himself
    will get us to the place without our efforts.

CADMUS
  Of all the city are we the only ones who'll dance to honour Bacchus?

TIRESIAS
    Yes, indeed,
    for we're the only ones whose minds are clear.
    As for the others, well, their thinking's wrong.

CADMUS
  There'll be a lengthy wait. Take my hand.

TIRESIAS [holding out his hand]
    Here. Take it—make a pair of it and yours.

CADMUS
  I'm a mortal, so I don't mock the gods.

TIRESIAS
  To the gods we mortals are all ignorant.
  Those old traditions from our ancestors,
  the ones we've had as long as time itself,
  no argument will ever overthrow,
  in spite of subtleties sharp minds invent.
  Will someone say I disrespect old age,
  if I intend to dance with ivy on my head?
  Not so, for the god makes no distinctions—
  whether the dancing is for young or old.
  He wants to gather honours from us all,
  to be praised communally, without division.

CADMUS
  Since you're blind to daylight, Tiresias,
BACCHAE

I'll be your seer, tell you what's going on—Pentheus, that child of Echion, the one to whom I handed power in this land, he's coming here, to the house. He's in a rush.
He looks so flustered. What news will he bring?

[Enter Pentheus, with some armed attendants. At first he does not notice Cadmus and Tiresias, not until he calls attention to them.]

PENTHEUS

It so happens I've been away from Thebes, 270 but I hear about disgusting things going on, here in the city—women leaving home
to go to silly Bacchic rituals, cavorting there in mountain shadows,
with dances honouring some upstart god,
this Dionysus, whoever he may be. Mixing bowls 220
in the middle of their meetings are filled with wine.
They creep off one by one to lonely spots to have sex with men, claiming they're maenads busy worshipping. But they rank Aphrodite, 280 goddess of sexual desire, ahead of Bacchus.
All the ones I've caught, my servants guard
in our public prison, their hands chained up.
All those not in the city, I'll chase down, hunt them from the mountains—that includes Agave, who bore me to Echion, Ino, and Autonoe, Actaeon's mother.¹

Once I've clamped them all in iron fetters, I'll quickly end this perverse nastiness,
this Bacchic celebration. People say 230 some stranger has arrived, some wizard, a conjurer from the land of Lydia—with sweet-smelling hair in golden ringlets and Aphrodite's charms in wine-dark eyes.
He hangs around the young girls day and night,
dangling in front of them his joyful mysteries.
If I catch him in this city, I'll stop him.

¹Agave (Pentheus' mother), Ino, and Autonoe are sisters, all daughters of Cadmus. Actaeon, son of Autonoe, offended the goddess Artemis, who turned him into a stag and had him torn apart by his own hunting dogs (see line 429 below).
He'll make no more clatter with his thyrsus, or wave his hair around. I'll chop off his head, slice it right from his body. This man claims that Dionysus is a god, alleging that once upon a time he was sewn up, stitched inside Zeus's thigh—but Dionysus was burned to death, along with Semele, in that lightning strike, because she'd lied. She maintained that she'd had sex with Zeus. All this surely merits harsh punishment, death by hanging. Whoever this stranger is, his insolence is an insult to me.

[Noticing Cadmus and Tiresias for the first time]

Well, here's something totally astounding! I see Tiresias, our soothsayer, all dressed up in dappled fawn skins—my mother's father, too! This is ridiculous. To take a thyrsus and jump around like this. [To Cadmus] You sir, I don't like to see such arrant foolishness from your old age. Why not throw out that ivy? And, grandfather, why not let that thyrsus go?

[Turning to address Tiresias]

Tiresias, you're the one who's put him up to this. You want to bring in some new god for men, so you'll be able to inspect more birds, and from his sacrifices make more money. If your gray old age did not protect you, you'd sit in chains with all the Bacchae for such a ceremonial perversion. Whenever women at some banquet start to take pleasure in the gleaming wine, I say there's nothing healthy in their worshipping.

CHORUS LEADER
That is impiety! O stranger, have you no reverence for the gods, for Cadmus, who sowed that crop of men born from the earth?
You’re a child of Echion—do you wish to bring your own family into disrepute?

TIRESIAS
When a man of wisdom has good occasion to speak out, and takes the opportunity,
it’s not that hard to give an excellent speech.
You’ve got a quick tongue and seem intelligent,
but your words don’t make any sense at all.
A fluent orator whose power comes from self-assurance and from nothing else makes a bad citizen, for he lacks sense.
This man, this new god, whom you ridicule—
it’s impossible for me to tell you just how great he’ll be in all of Greece.
Young man, among human beings two things stand out preeminent, of highest rank.
Goddess Demeter is one—she’s the earth (though you can call her any name you wish),
and she feeds mortal people cereal grains.
The other one came later, born of Semele—
he brought with him liquor from the grape, something to match the bread from Demeter.
He introduced it among mortal men.
When they can drink up what streams off the vine, unhappy mortals are released from pain.
It grants them sleep, allows them to forget their daily troubles. Apart from wine, there is no cure for human hardship.
He, being a god, is poured out to the gods,
so human beings receive fine benefits
as gifts from him. And yet you mock him. Why?
Because he was sewn into Zeus thigh?
Well, I’ll show you how this all makes sense.
When Zeus grabbed him from the lightning flame,
he brought him to Olympus as a god.

1When Cadmus chose a site for the city of Thebes, he had to fight a dragon to gain possession of the land. Once he killed the dragon, he sowed its teeth in the ground. From them armed men sprang up, who began to fight each other. The small group of the men who survived then aided Cadmus to build the city. They were the first Thebans.
BACCHAE

But Hera wished to throw him out of heaven. So Zeus, in a manner worthy of a god, came up with a devious counter plan. From the sky which flows around the earth, Zeus broke off a piece, shaped it like Dionysus, then gave that to Hera, as a hostage. The real child he sent to nymphs to raise, thus saving him from Hera’s jealousy. Over time people mixed up “sky” and “thigh,” saying he’d come from Zeus’s thigh, changing words, because he, a god, had once been hostage to goddess Hera. So they made up the tale. This god’s a prophet, too, for in his rites—the Bacchic celebrations and the madness—a huge prophetic power is unleashed. When the god fully enters human bodies, he makes those possessed by frenzy prophets. They speak of what will come in future days. He also shares the work of war god Ares. For there are times an army all drawn up, its weapons ready, can shake with terror, before any man has set hand to his spear. Such madness comes from Dionysus. Some day you’ll see him on those rocks at Delphi, leaping with torches on the higher slopes, way up there between two mountain peaks, waving and brandishing his Bacchic wand, a great power in Greece. Trust me, Pentheus. Don’t be too confident a sovereign’s force controls men. If something seems right to you, but your mind’s diseased, don’t think that’s wisdom. So welcome this god into your country. Pour libations to him, then celebrate these Bacchic rites with garlands on your head. On women, where Aphrodite is concerned, Dionysus will not enforce restraint—such modesty you must seek in nature, where it already dwells. For any woman whose character is chaste won’t be defiled by Bacchic revelry. Don’t you see that? When there are many people at your gates, you’re happy. The city shouts your praise. It celebrates the name of Pentheus. [320]
The god, too, I think, derives great pleasure from being honoured. And so Cadmus, whom you mock, and I will crown our heads with ivy and will join the ritual, an old gray team, but still we have to dance. Your words will not turn me against the god, for you are mad—under a cruel delusion. No drug can heal that ailment—in fact, some drug has caused it.

CHORUS LEADER: Old man, you’ve not disgraced Apollo with your words, and by honouring this Dionysus, a great god, you show your moderation.

CADMUS My child, Tiresias has given you some good advice. You should live among us, not outside traditions. At this point, you’re flying around—thinking, but not clearly. For if, as you claim, this man is not a god, why not call him one? Why not tell a lie, a really good one? Then it will seem that some god has been born to Semele. We—and all our family—will win honour. Remember the dismal fate of Actaeon—torn to pieces in some mountain forest by blood-thirsty dogs he’d raised himself. He’d boasted he was better in the hunt than Artemis. Don’t suffer the same fate. Come here. Let me crown your head with ivy. Join us in giving honour to this god.

PENTHEUS Keep your hands off me! Be off with you—go to these Bacchic rituals of yours. But don’t infect me with your madness.
As for the one who in this foolishness has been your teacher, I’ll bring him to justice.

[To his attendants]

One of you, go quickly to where this man, Tiresias, has that seat of his, the place where he inspects his birds. Take some levers, knock it down. Demolish it completely.
Turn the whole place upside down—all of it.
Let his holy ribbons fly off in the winds.
That way I’ll really do him damage.
You others—go to the city, scour it to capture this effeminate stranger, who corrupts our women with a new disease,
and thus infects our beds. If you get him, tie him up and bring him here for judgment,
a death by stoning. That way he’ll see his rites in Thebes come to a bitter end.

[Exit Pentheus into the palace.]

TIRESIAS
You unhappy man, you’ve no idea
just what it is you’re saying. You’ve gone mad!
Even before now you weren’t in your right mind.
Let’s be off, Cadmus. We’ll pray to the god on Pentheus’ behalf, though he’s a savage, and for the city, too, so he won’t harm it.
Come with me—bring the ivy-covered staff.
See if you can help support my body.
I’ll do the same for you. It would be shameful if two old men collapsed. No matter—for we must serve Bacchus, son of Zeus.
But you, Cadmus, you should be more careful,
or Pentheus will bring trouble in your home.
I’m not saying this as a prophecy,
but on the basis of what’s going on.
A man who’s mad tends to utter madness.

[Exit Tiresias and Cadmus together on their way to the mountains.]
Bacchae

Chorus
Holiness, queen of the gods,
Holiness, sweeping over earth
on wings of gold,
do you hear what Pentheus says?
Do you hear the profanities he utters,
the insults against Bromius, child of Semele, chief god
among all blessed gods,
for those who wear their lovely garlands in a spirit of harmonious joy?
This is his special office,
to lead men together in the dance,
to make them laugh as the flute plays,
to bring all sorrows to an end,
at the god’s sacrificial feast,
when the gleaming liquid grapes arrive,
when the wine bowl casts its sleep on ivy-covered feasting men.

Unbridled tongues and lawless folly come to an end only in disaster.
A peaceful life of wisdom maintains tranquillity.
It keeps the home united.
Though gods live in the sky,
from far away in heaven
they gaze upon the deeds of men.
But being clever isn’t wisdom.
And thinking deeply about things is not suitable for mortal men.
Our life is brief—that’s why
the man who chases greatness fails to grasp what’s near at hand.
That’s what madmen do,
men who’ve lost their wits.
That’s what I believe.

Would I might go to Cyprus, island of Aphrodite,
where the Erotes, bewitching goddesses of love,
soothe the hearts of humankind,
or to Paphos, rich and fertile,
not with rain, but with the waters of a hundred flowing mouths of a strange and foreign river.
O Bromius, Bromius,
inspired god who leads the Bacchae,
lead me away to lovely Peira,
where Muses dwell,
or to Olympus’ sacred slopes,
where Graces live, Desire, too, where it’s lawful and appropriate to celebrate our rites with Bacchus.

This god, a son of Zeus,
rejoices in our banquets.
He adores the goddess Peace, and she brings riches with her and nourishes the young.
The god gives his wine equally,
sharing with rich and poor alike.
It takes away all sorrow.
But he hates the man who doesn’t care
to live his life in happiness,
by day and through the friendly nights.
From those who deny such common things
he removes intelligence, their knowledge of true wisdom.
So I take this as my rule—follow what common people think—do what most men do.

[Enter a group of soldiers, bringing Dionysus with his arms tied up. Pentheus enters from the palace.]

SOLDIER
Pentheus, we’re here because we’ve caught the prey you sent us out to catch. Yes, our attempts have proved successful. The beast you see here was tame with us. He didn’t try to run.
No, he surrendered willingly enough, without turning pale or changing colour on those wine dark cheeks. He even laughed at us, inviting us to tie him up and lead him off.
He stood still, making it easier for me to take him in. It was awkward, so I said, “Stranger, I don’t want to lead you off,
but I’m under orders here from Pentheus, who sent me.” And there’s something else—those Bacchic women you locked up, the ones you took in chains into the public prison—they’ve all escaped. They’re gone—playing around in some meadow, calling out to Bromius, summoning their god. Chains fell off their feet, just dropping on their own. Keys opened doors not turned by human hands. This man here has come to Thebes full of amazing tricks.
But now the rest of this affair is up to you.

[Soldier hands chained Dionysus over to Pentheus.]

PENTHEUS [moving up close to Dionysus]
Untie his hands. I’ve got him in my nets.
He’s not fast enough to get away from me.

[Soldiers remove the chains from Dionysus’s hands. Pentheus moves in closer.]

Well, stranger, I see this body of yours is not unsuitable for women’s pleasure—that’s why you’ve come to Thebes. As for your hair, it’s long, which suggests that you’re no wrestler.
It flows across your cheeks. That’s most seductive.
You’ve a white skin, too. You’ve looked after it, avoiding the sun’s rays by staying in the shade,
while with your beauty you chase Aphrodite.
But first tell me something of your family.

DIONYSUS
That’s easy enough, though I’m not boasting.
You’ve heard of Tmolus, where flowers grow.
PENTHEUS
I know it. It’s around the town of Sardis.

DIONYSUS
I’m from there. My homeland is Lydia.

PENTHEUS
Why do you bring these rituals to Greece?

DIONYSUS
Dionysus sent me—the son of Zeus.

PENTHEUS
Is there some Zeus there who creates new gods?

DIONYSUS
No. It’s the same Zeus who wed Semele right here.

PENTHEUS
Did this Zeus overpower you at night, in your dreams? Or were your eyes wide open?

DIONYSUS
I saw him—he saw me. He gave me the sacred rituals.

PENTHEUS
Tell me what they’re like, those rituals of yours.

DIONYSUS
That information cannot be passed on to men like you, those uninitiated in the rites of Bacchus.

PENTHEUS
Do they benefit those who sacrifice?

DIONYSUS
They’re worth knowing, but you’re not allowed to hear.
PENTHEUS
You’ve avoided that question skillfully, 590 making me want to hear an answer.

DIONYSUS
The rituals are no friend of any man who’s hostile to the gods.

PENTHEUS
This god of yours,
since you saw him clearly, what’s he like?

DIONYSUS
He was what he wished to be, not made to order.

PENTHEUS
Again you fluently evade my question, saying nothing whatsoever.

DIONYSUS
Yes, but then
a man can seem totally ignorant
when speaking to a fool. 480

PENTHEUS
Is Thebes 600
the first place you’ve come to with your god?

DIONYSUS
All the barbarians are dancing in these rites.¹

PENTHEUS
I’m not surprised. They’re stupider than Greeks.

DIONYSUS
In this they are much wiser. But their laws are very different, too.

¹The term barbarian refers to non-Greek-speaking people.
PENTHEUS
  When you dance these rites, is it at night or during daylight?

DIONYSUS
  Mainly at night. Shadows confer solemnity.

PENTHEUS
  And deceive the women. It’s all corrupt!

DIONYSUS
  One can do shameful things in daylight, too.

PENTHEUS
  You must be punished for these evil games.

DIONYSUS
  You, too—for foolishness, impiety towards the god. 610

PENTHEUS
  How brash this Bacchant is!
  How well prepared in using language!

DIONYSUS
  What punishment am I to suffer?
  What harsh penalties will you inflict?

PENTHEUS
  First, I’ll cut off this delicate hair of yours.

DIONYSUS
  My hair is sacred. I grow it for the god.

PENTHEUS
  And give me that thyrsus in your hand.

DIONYSUS
  This wand I carry is the god’s, not mine.
  You’ll have to seize it from me for yourself.
PENTHEUS
    We’ll lock your body up inside, in prison. 620

DIONYSUS
    The god will personally set me free, whenever I so choose.

PENTHEUS
    That only works
    if you call him while among the Bacchae.

DIONYSUS
    He sees my suffering now—and from nearby. [500]

PENTHEUS
    Where is he then? My eyes don’t see him.

DIONYSUS
    He’s where I am. You can’t see him, because you don’t believe.

DIONYSUS [to his attendants]
    Seize him.
    He’s insulting Thebes and me.

DIONYSUS
    I warn you—you shouldn’t tie me up.
    I’ve got my wits about me. You’ve lost yours. 630

PENTHEUS
    But am more powerful than you,
    so I’ll have you put in chains.

DIONYSUS
    You’re quite ignorant of why you live, what you do, and who you are.

PENTHEUS
    I am Pentheus, son of Agave and Echion.
BACCHAE

DIONYSUS
A suitable name. It suggests misfortune.¹

PENTHEUS [to his soldiers]  Go now.
Lock him up—in the adjoining stables.
That way he'll see nothing but the darkness. [510]
There you can dance. As for all those women, those partners in crime you brought here with you,
we'll sell them off or keep them here as slaves,  640 working our looms, once we've stopped their hands beating those drum skins, making all that noise.

[Exit Pentheus into the palace, leaving Dionysus with the soldiers.]

DIONYSUS
I'll go, then. For I won't have to suffer what won't occur. But you can be sure of this—Dionysus, whom you claim does not exist, will go after you for retribution after all your insolence. He's the one you put in chains when you treat me unjustly.

[The soldiers lead Dionysus away to an area beside the palace.]

CHORUS
O Sacred Dirce, blessed maiden, daughter of Achelous,  650  [520] your streams once received the new-born child of Zeus, when his father snatched him
from those immortal fires,
then hid him in his thigh,
crying out these words,
"Go, Dithyrambus,
enter my male womb.
I'll make you known as Bacchus to everyone in Thebes, who'll invoke you with that name."

¹The name Pentheus is derived from the Greek word penthos (sorrow, grief) and means “Man of Sorrows.”
BACCHAE

But you, O sacred Dirce, why do you resist me, my garland-bearing company, along your river banks? Why push me away? Why seek to flee from me? I tell you, you'll find joy in grape-filled vines from Dionysus. They'll make you love him.

What rage, what rage shows up in that earth-bound race of Pentheus, born to Echion, an earth-bound mortal. He's descended from a snake, that Pentheus, a savage beast, not a normal mortal man, but some bloody monster who fights against the gods.¹ He'll soon bind me in chains, as a worshipper of Bacchus. Already he holds in his house my fellow Bacchic revelers, hidden there in some dark cell. Do you see, Dionysus, child of Zeus, your followers fighting their oppression? Come down, my lord, down from Olympus, wave your golden thyrsus, to cut short the profanities of this blood-thirsty man.

Where on Mount Nysa, which nourishes wild beasts, where on the Corcyrean heights, where do you wave your thyrsus over your worshippers, ¹Pentheus' father Echion was one of the warriors born when Cadmus, on instructions from the gods, killed a serpent-dragon and sowed its teeth in the earth. The teeth germinated as warriors rising from the ground.

O Dionysus?
Perhaps in those thick woods
of Mount Olympus,
where Orpheus once played his lyre, brought trees together with his songs,
collecting wild beasts round him.
O blessed Peiria, whom Dionysus loves—he'll come to set you dancing in the Bacchic celebrations.
He'll cross the foaming Axius, lead his whirling maenads on, leaving behind the river Lydias which enriches mortal men,
and which, they say, acts as a father, nourishing with many lovely streams
a land where horses flourish.

[The soldiers move in to round up the chorus of Bacchae. As they do so, the ground begins to shake, thunder sounds, lightning flashes, and the entire palace starts to break apart.]

DIONYSUS [shouting from within the palace]
Io! Hear me, hear me as I call you.
Io! Bacchae! Io Bacchae!

CHORUS [a confusion of different voices in the following speeches]
Who's that? Who is it? It's Dionysus' voice!
It's calling me. But from what direction?

DIONYSUS [From inside the palace]
Io! Io! I'm calling out again—the son of Semele, a child of Zeus!

CHORUS
Io! Io! Lord and master!
Come join our company,
Bromius, O Bromius!

DIONYSUS [From inside]
Sacred lord of earthquakes, shake this ground.
[The earthquake tremors resume.]

CHORUS VOICE 1
    Ai! Soon Pentheus’s palace will be shaken into rubble.

CHORUS VOICE 2
    Dionysus is in the house—revere him.

CHORUS VOICE 3
    We revere him, we revere him. [590]

CHORUS VOICE 4
    You see those stone lintels on the pillars—they’re splitting up. It’s Bromius calling, shouting to us from inside the walls. 730

DIONYSUS [from inside the palace]
    Let fiery lightning strike right now—burn Pentheus’ palace—consume it all!

CHORUS VOICE 5
    Look! Do you not see the fire—
    there by the sacred tomb of Semele!
    The flame left by that thunderbolt from Zeus,
    when the lightning flash destroyed her,
    all that time ago. O maenads—throw your bodies on the ground, down, down, for our master, Zeus’s son, moves now against the palace—to demolish it. 740

[Enter Dionysus, bursting through the palace front doors, free of all chains, smiling and supremely confident.]

DIONYSUS
    Ah, my barbarian Asian women,
    Do you lie there on the ground prostrate with fear?
    It seems you feel Dionysus’ power,
    as he rattles Pentheus’s palace.
    Get up now. Be brave. And stop your trembling.
CHORUS LEADER
How happy I am to see you once more—
Our greatest light in all the joyful dancing!
We felt alone and totally abandoned.

DIONYSUS
Did you feel despair when I was sent away, cast down in Pentheus’ gloomy dungeon?

CHORUS LEADER
How could I not? Who’ll protect me if you run into trouble? But tell me, how did you escape that ungodly man?

DIONYSUS
No trouble. I saved myself with ease.

CHORUS LEADER
But didn’t he bind up your hands up in chains?

DIONYSUS
In this business I was playing with him—
he thought he was tying me up, the fool!
He did not even touch or handle me,
he was so busy feeding his desires.
In that stable where he went to tie me up,
he found a bull. He threw the iron fetters around its knees and hooves. As he did so, he kept panting in his rage, dripping sweat
from his whole body—his teeth gnawed his lip.
I watched him, sitting quietly nearby.
After a while, Bacchus came and shook the place, setting his mother Semele’s tomb on fire.
Seeing that, Pentheus thought his palace was burning down. He ran round, here and there, yelling to his slaves to bring more water.
His servants set to work—and all for nothing!
Once I’d escaped, he ended all that work.
Seizing a dark sword, he rushed inside the house.
Then, it seems to me, but I’m guessing now, Bromius set up out there in the courtyard
some phantom image. Pentheus charged it, slashing away at nothing but bright air, thinking he was butchering me. There’s more—Bacchus kept hurting him in still more ways.

He knocked his house down, level with the ground, all shattered, so Pentheus has witnessed a bitter end to my imprisonment. He’s dropped his sword, worn out, exhausted, a mere mortal daring to fight a god. So now I’ve strolled out calmly to you, leaving the house, ignoring Pentheus. Wait! It seems to me I hear marching feet—no doubt he’ll come out front here soon enough. What will he say, I wonder, after this? Well, I’ll deal with him quite gently, even if he comes out breathing up a storm. After all, a wise man ought to keep his temper.

[Penheus comes hurriedly out of the palace, accompanied by armed soldiers.]

PENTHEUS
What’s happening to me—total disaster! The stranger’s escaped, and we’d just chained him up.

[Seeing Dionysus]

Ah ha! Here is the man—right here. What’s going on? How did you get out? How come you’re here, outside my palace?

DIONYSUS
Hold on. Calm down. Don’t be so angry.

PENTHEUS
How did you escape your chains and get here? 800

DIONYSUS
Did I not say someone would release me—or did you miss that part?
PENTHEUS
    Who was it? [650]
    You're always explaining things in riddles.
DIONYSUS
    It was the one who cultivates for men
    the richly clustering vine.

PENTHEUS
    Ah, this Dionysus.
    Your words are a lovely insult to your god.
DIONYSUS
    He came to Thebes with nothing but good things.

PENTHEUS [to soldiers]
    Seal off all the towers on my orders—
    all of them around the city.

DIONYSUS
    What for?
    Surely a god can make it over any wall? 810

PENTHEUS
    You're so wise, except in all those things in which you should be wise.

DIONYSUS
    I was born wise, especially in matters where I need to be.

[Enter the Messenger, a cattle herder from the hills.]

DIONYSUS
    But first you'd better listen to this man, hear what he has to say, for he's come here
    from the mountains to report to you.
    I'll still be here for you. I won't run off.

MESSENGER
    Pentheus, ruler of this land of Thebes, I’ve just left Cithaeron, that mountain where the sparkling snow never melts away.

PENTHEUS
What this important news you’ve come with?

MESSENGER
I saw those women in their Bacchic revels,
those sacred screamers, all driven crazy,
the ones who run barefoot from their homes.
I came, my lord, to tell you and the city
the dreadful things they’re doing, their actions are beyond all wonder. But, my lord, first I wish to know if I should tell you,
openly report what’s going on up there,
or whether I should hold my tongue.
Your mood changes so fast I get afraid—your sharp spirit, your all-too-royal temper.

PENTHEUS
Speak on. Whatever you have to report, you’ll get no punishment at all from me.
It’s not right to vent one’s anger on the just.
The more terrible the things you tell me about those Bacchic women, the worse I’ll move against the one who taught them all their devious tricks.

MESSENGER
The grazing cattle were just moving into upland pastures, at the hour the sun sends out its beams to warm the earth. Right then I saw them—three groups of dancing women. One of them Autonoe led. Your mother, Agave, led the second group, and Ino led the third.
They were all asleep, bodies quite relaxed,
some leaning back on leafy boughs of pine,
others cradling heads on oak-leaf pillows, resting on the ground—in all modesty.
They weren’t as you described—all drunk on wine or on the music of their flutes, hunting for Aphrodite in the woods alone.
Once she heard my horned cattle lowing,
your mother stood up amid those Bacchae,
then called them to stir their limbs from sleep.
They rubbed refreshing sleep out of their eyes,
and stood up straight there—a marvellous sight,
to see such an orderly arrangement,
women young and old and still unmarried girls.
First, they let their hair loose down their shoulders, tied up the fawn skins—some had untied the knots to loosen up the chords. Then around those skins they looped some snakes, who licked the women’s cheeks.
Some held young gazelles or wild wolf cubs and fed them on their own white milk, the ones who’d left behind at home a new-born child, whose breasts were still swollen full of milk.
They draped themselves with garlands from oak trees, ivy and flowering yew. Then one of them, taking a thyrsus, struck a rock with it,
and water gushed out, fresh as dew. Another, using her thyrsus, scraped the ground. At once,
the god sent fountains of wine up from the spot.
All those who craved white milk to drink
just scratched the earth with their fingertips—it came out in streams. From their ivy wands thick sweet honey dripped. O if you’d been there, if you’d seen this, you’d come with reverence to that god whom you criticize so much.
Well, we cattle herders and shepherds met to discuss and argue with each other about the astonishing things we’d seen.
And then a man who’d been in town a bit and had a way with words said to us all, “You men who live in the holy regions of these mountains, how’d you like to hunt down Pentheus’ mother, Agave—take her away from these Bacchic celebrations, do the king a favour?” To all of us he seemed to make good sense. So we set up an ambush, hiding in the bushes, lying down there. At the appointed time, the women started their Bacchic ritual, brandishing the thyrsus and calling out to the god they cry to, Bromius, Zeus’s son. The entire mountain and its wild animals were, like them, in one Bacchic ecstasy. As these women moved, they made all things dance. Agave, by chance, was dancing close to me. Leaving the ambush where I’d been concealed, I jumped out, hoping to grab hold of her. But she screamed out, “O my quick hounds, men are hunting us. Come, follow me. Come on, armed with that thyrsus in your hand.” We ran off, and so escaped being torn apart. But then those Bacchic women, all unarmed, went at the heifers browsing on the turf, using their bare hands. You should have seen one ripping a fat, young, lowing calf apart—others tearing cows in pieces with their hands. You could have seen ribs and cloven hooves tossed everywhere—some hung up in branches dripping blood and gore. And bulls, proud beasts till then, with angry horns, collapsed there on the ground, dragged down by the hands of a thousand girls. Hides covering their bodies were stripped off faster than you could wink your royal eye. Then, like birds carried up by their own speed, they rushed along the lower level ground, beside Asopus’ streams, that fertile land which yields its crops to Thebes. Like fighting troops, they raided Hysiae and Erythrae, below rocky Cithaeron, destroying everything, snatching children from their homes. Whatever they carried their shoulders, even bronze or iron, never tumbled off onto the dark earth, though nothing was tied down. They carried fire in their hair, but those flames never singed them. Some of the villagers, enraged at being plundered by the Bacchae, seized weapons. The sight of what happened next, my lord, was dreadful. For their pointed spears did not draw blood. But when those women threw the thrysoi in their hands, they wounded them and drove them back in flight. The women did this to men, but not without some god’s assistance. Then they went back to where they’d started from, those fountains which the god had made for them. They washed off the blood. Snakes licked their cheeks, cleansing their skin of every drop. My lord, you must welcome this god into our city, whoever he is. He’s a mighty god in many other ways. The people say, so I’ve heard, he gives to mortal human beings that vine which puts an end to human grief. Without wine, there’s no more Aphrodite—or any other pleasure left for men.

CHORUS LEADER
I’m afraid to talk freely before the king, but nonetheless I’ll speak—this Dionysus is not inferior to any god.

PENTHEUS
This Dionysian arrogance, like fire, keeps flaring up close by—a great insult to all the Greeks. We must not hesitate.

[To one of his armed attendants]

Go to the Electra Gates. Call out the troops, the heavy infantry, all fast cavalry. Tell them to muster, along with all those who carry shields—all the archers, too, the men who pull the bowstring back by hand. We’ll march out against these Bacchae. In this whole business we will lose control, if we have to put up with what we’ve suffered from these women.

DIONYSUS
You’ve heard what I had to say, Pentheus, but still you’re not convinced.
Though I’m suffering badly at your hands,
I say you shouldn’t go to war against a god.
You should stay calm. Bromius will not let you move his Bacchae from their mountains.

PENTHEUS

Don’t preach to me! You’ve got out of prison—enjoy that fact. Or shall I punish you some more?

DIONYSUS

I’d sooner make an offering to that god than in some angry fit kick at his whip—
a mortal going to battle with a god.

PENTHEUS

I’ll sacrifice all right—with a slaughter of those women, just as they deserve—
in the forests on Cithaeron.

DIONYSUS

You’ll all run.
What a disgrace! To turn your bronze shields round, fleeing the thyrsoi of those Bacchic women!

PENTHEUS [turning to one of his armed attendants]

It’s useless trying to argue with this stranger—whatever he does or suffers, he won’t shut up.

DIONYSUS [calling Pentheus back]

My lord! There’s still a chance to end this calmly.

PENTHEUS

By doing what? Should I become a slave to my own slaves?

DIONYSUS

I’ll bring the women here—without the use of any weapons.
PENTHEUS
I don’t think so.
You’re setting me up for your tricks again.

DIONYSUS
What sort of trick, if I want to save you in my own way?

PENTHEUS
You’ve made some arrangement,
you and your god, so you can always dance
your Bacchanalian orgies.

DIONYSUS
Yes, that’s true.
I have made some arrangement with the god.

PENTHEUS [to one of his armed servants]
You there, bring me my weapons.

[to Dionysus]
And you,
No more talk! Keep quiet!

DIONYSUS
Just a minute! [810]

[ moving up to Pentheus]
How would you like to gaze upon those women sitting together in the mountains?

PENTHEUS
I’d like that.
Yes, for that I’d pay in gold—and pay a lot.

DIONYSUS
Why is that? Why do you desire it so much?
PENTHEUS
  I’d be sorry to see the women drunk.

DIONYSUS
  Would you derive pleasure from looking on, viewing something you find painful?

PENTHEUS
  Yes, I would—
  if I were sitting in the trees in silence.

DIONYSUS
  But even if you go there secretly, they’ll track you down.

PENTHEUS
  You’re right.
  I’ll go there openly.

DIONYSUS
  So you’re prepared, are you, to make the trip? Shall I lead you there?

PENTHEUS
  Let’s go, and with all speed. I’ve got time.

DIONYSUS
  In that case, you must clothe your body in a dress—one made of eastern linen.

PENTHEUS
  What! I’m not going up there as a man?
  I’ve got to change myself into a woman

DIONYSUS
  If they see you as a man, they’ll kill you.

PENTHEUS
  Right again. You always have the answer.
PENTHEUS
How can I best follow your suggestion?

DIONYSUS
I’ll go inside your house and dress you up.

PENTHEUS
What? Dress up in a female outfit?
I can’t do that—I’d be ashamed to.

DIONYSUS
You’re still keen to see the maenads, aren’t you?

PENTHEUS
What sort of clothing do you recommend?
How should I cover up my body? [830]

DIONYSUS
I’ll fix up a long hair piece for your head.

PENTHEUS
All right. What’s the next piece of my outfit? 1020

DIONYSUS
A dress down to your feet—then a headband, to fit just here, around your forehead.

PENTHEUS
What else? What other things will you provide?

DIONYSUS
A thyrsus to hold and a dappled fawn skin.

PENTHEUS
No. I can’t dress up in women’s clothes!

DIONYSUS
But if you go fighting with these Bacchae, you’ll cause bloodshed.
PENTHEUS
Yes, that’s true.
So first, we must go up and spy on them.

DIONYSUS
Hunt down evil by committing evil—that sounds like a wise way to proceed.

PENTHEUS
But how will I make it through the city without the Thebans noticing me?

[DIONYSUS
We go by deserted streets. I’ll take you.

PENTHEUS
Well, anything’s easier to accept than being made a fool by Bacchic women.
Let’s go in the house. I’ll think about what’s best.

DIONYSUS
As you wish. Whatever you do, I’m ready.

PENTHEUS
I think I’ll go in now. It’s a choice of going with weapons or taking your advice.

[Exit Pentheus into the palace. Dionysus turns to face the chorus.]

DIONYSUS
My women! That man is now entangled in our net.
He’ll go to those Bacchae, and there he’ll die.
That will be his punishment. Dionysus, you’re not far away. Now it’s up to you.
Punish him. First, make sure he goes insane with some crazed fantasy. If his mind is strong, he’ll not agree to put on women’s clothes.
But he’ll do it, if you make him mad.
I want him made the laughing stock of Thebes,
while I lead him through the city, mincing
as he moves along in women’s clothing.
after he made himself so terrifying with all those earlier threats. Now I’ll be off, to fit Pentheus into the costume
he’ll wear when he goes down to Hades, once he’s butchered by his mother’s hands.
He’ll come to acknowledge Dionysus, son of Zeus, born in full divinity,
most fearful and yet most kind to men.

\[Exit Dionysus.\]

CHORUS

O when will I be dancing,
leaping barefoot through the night,
flinging back my head in ecstasy,
in the clear, cold, dew-fresh air—
like a playful fawn celebrating its green joy across the meadows—
joy that it’s escaped the fearful hunt—
as she runs beyond the hunters, leaping past their woven nets—
they call out to their hounds to chase her with still more speed, but she strains every limb,
racing like a wind storm, rejoicing by the river plain,
in places where no hunters lurk,
in the green living world
beneath the shady branches,
the foliage of the trees.

What is wisdom? What is finer
than the rights men get from gods—
to hold their powerful hands
over the heads of their enemies?
Ah yes, what’s good is always loved.

The power of the gods is difficult to stir—
but it’s a power we can count on.
It punishes all mortal men who honour their own ruthless wills, who, in their fits of madness,
fail to reverence the gods.
Gods track down every man who scorns their worship, using their cunning to conceal the enduring steady pace of time.
For there’s no righteousness in those who recognize or practice what’s beyond our customary laws.
The truth is easy to acknowledge:
whatever is divine is mighty, whatever has been long-established law is an eternal natural truth.

What is wisdom? What is finer
than the rights men get from gods—
to hold their powerful hands
over the heads of their enemies?
Ah yes, what’s good is always loved.

Whoever has escaped a storm at sea is a happy man in harbour, whoever overcomes great hardship is likewise another happy man.
Various men outdo each other in wealth, in power,
in all sorts of ways.
The hopes of countless men are infinite in number.
Some make men rich;
some come to nothing.
So I consider that man blessed who lives a happy life existing day by day.

[Enter Dionysus from the palace. He calls back through the open doors.]

DIONYSUS
You who are so desperately eager to see those things you should not look upon, so keen to chase what you should not pursue—
I mean you, Pentheus, come out here now, outside the palace, where I can see you dressed up as a raving Bacchic female,
to spy upon your mother’s company.

[Enter Pentheus dressed in women’s clothing. He moves in a deliberately overstated female way, enjoying the role.]

DIONYSUS
You look just like one of Cadmus’ daughters.

PENTHEUS
Fancy that! I seem to see two suns, two images of seven-gated Thebes.
And you look like a bull leading me out here,
with those horns growing from your head.
Were you once upon a time a beast?
It’s certain now you’ve changed into a bull.

DIONYSUS
The god walks here. He’s made a pact with us.
Before his attitude was not so kind.
Now you’re seeing just what you ought to see.

PENTHEUS
How do I look? Am I holding myself just like Ino or my mother, Agave?

DIONYSUS
When I look at you, I think I see them.
But here, this strand of hair is out of place.
It’s not under the headband where I fixed it.

PENTHEUS [demonstrating his dancing steps]
I must have worked it loose inside the house, shaking my head when I moved here and there,
practising my Bacchanalian dance.
BACCHAE

DIONYSUS
I’ll rearrange it for you. It’s only right that I should serve you. Straighten up your head.

[Dionysus begins adjusting Pentheus’s hair and clothing.]

PENTHEUS
All right then. You can be my dresser, now that I’ve transformed myself for you.

DIONYSUS
Your belt is loose. And these pleats in your dress are crooked, too, down at your ankle here.

PENTHEUS [examining the back of his legs]
Yes, that seems to be true for my right leg, but on this side the dress hangs perfectly, down the full length of my limb.

DIONYSUS
Once you see those Bacchic women acting modestly, once you confront something you don’t expect, you’ll consider me your dearest friend.

PENTHEUS
This thyrsus—should I hold it in my right hand, or in my left? Which is more suitable in Bacchic celebrations?

DIONYSUS
In your right. You must lift your right foot in time with it.

[Dionysus observes Pentheus trying out the dance step.]

DIONYSUS
Your mind has changed. I applaud you for it.

PENTHEUS
Will I be powerful enough to carry the forests of Cithaeron on my shoulders, along with all those Bacchic females?

DIONYSUS
If you have desire, you'll have the power.
Before this your mind was not well adjusted.
But now it's working in you as it should.

PENTHEUS
Are we going to take some levers with us?
Or shall I rip the forests up by hand,
putting arm and shoulder under mountain peaks?

DIONYSUS
As long as you don't utterly destroy those places where the nymphs all congregate, where Pan plays his music on his pipes.

PENTHEUS
You mention a good point. I'll use no force to get the better of these women.
I'll conceal myself there in the pine trees.

DIONYSUS
You'll find just the sort of hiding place
a spy should find who wants to hide himself, so he can gaze upon the maenads.

PENTHEUS
That's good. I can picture them right now, in the woods, going at it like rutting birds, clutching each other as they make sweet love.

DIONYSUS
Perhaps. That's why you're going—as a guard to stop all that. Maybe you'll capture them, unless you're captured first.

PENTHEUS
Lead on—through the centre of our land of Thebes.
I’m the only man in all the city who dares to undertake this enterprise.

DIONYSUS
You bear the city’s burden by yourself,
all by yourself. So your work is waiting there,
the tasks that have been specially set for you.
Follow me. I’m the guide who’ll rescue you.
When you return someone else will bring you back.

PENTHEUS
That will be my mother.

DIONYSUS
For everyone
you’ll have become someone to celebrate.

PENTHEUS
That’s why I’m going.

DIONYSUS
You’ll be carried back . . .

PENTHEUS [interrupting]
You’re pampering me!

DIONYSUS [continuing]
. . . in your mother’s arms.

PENTHEUS
You’ve really made up your mind to spoil me.

DIONYSUS
To spoil you? That’s true, but in my own way.

PENTHEUS
Then I’ll be off to get what I deserve.

[Exit Pentheus.]
BACCHAE

DIONYSUS [speaking in the direction Pentheus has gone]
You fearful, terrifying man—on your way to horrific suffering. Well, you’ll win a towering fame, as high as heaven.
Hold out your hand to him, Agave,
you, too, her sisters, Cadmus’s daughters.
I’m leading this young man in your direction,
for the great confrontation, where I’ll triumph—
I and Bromius. What else will happen events will show, as they occur.

[Exit Dionysus.]

CHORUS 1
Up now, you hounds of madness, go up now into the mountains,
go where Cadmus’ daughters keep their company of worshippers, goad them into furious revenge against that man, that raving spy,
all dressed up in his women’s clothes,
so keen to glimpse the maenads.
His mother will see him first,
as he spies on them in secret
from some level rock or crag.
She’ll scream out to her maenads, “Who’s the man who’s come here,
to the mountains, to these mountains,
tracking Cadmean mountain dancers?
O my Bacchae, who has come?
From whom was this man born?
He’s not born of woman’s blood—
he must be some lioness’s whelp or spawned from Libyan gorgons.”

CHORUS
Let justice manifest itself—
let justice march, sword in hand,
to stab him in the throat,
that godless, lawless man,
unjust earthborn seed of Echion.
Any man intent on wickedness,
turning his unlawful rage against your rites, O Bacchus, against the worship of your mother,
a man who sets out with an insane mind,
his courage founded on a falsehood, who seeks to overcome by force
what simply can’t be overcome—let death set his intentions straight.
For a life devoid of grief is one which receives without complaint whatever comes down from the gods—that’s how mortals ought to live.
Wisdom is something I don’t envy.
My joy comes hunting other things lofty and plain to everyone.
They lead man’s life to good in purity and reverence, honouring gods day and night,
eradicating from our lives customs lying beyond what’s right.

Let justice manifest itself—
Let justice march, sword in hand,
to stab him in the throat,
that godless, lawless man,
unjust earthborn seed of Echion.

Appear now to our sight, O Bacchus—come as a bull or many-headed serpent or else some fire-breathing lion.
Go now, Bacchus, with your smiling face cast your deadly noose upon that hunter of the Bacchae,
as the group of maenads brings him down.
SECOND MESSENGER
   How I grieve for this house, in earlier days
   so happy throughout Greece, home of that old man, Cadmus from Sidon, who sowed the fields to harvest the earth-born crop produced from serpent Ophis. How I now lament—
   I know I’m just a slave, but nonetheless . . .

CHORUS
   Do you bring us news?
   Has something happened,
   something about the Bacchae?

SECOND MESSENGER
   Pentheus, child of Echion, is dead.

CHORUS
   O my lord Bromius,
   Now your divine greatness is here made manifest!

SECOND MESSENGER
   What are you saying? Why that song?
   Women, how can you now rejoice like this for the death of one who was my master?

CHORUS LEADER
   We’re strangers here in Thebes, so we sing out our joy
   in chants from foreign lands.
   No longer need we cower here in fear of prisoner’s chains.

SECOND MESSENGER
   Do you think Thebes lacks sufficient men to take care of your punishment?

CHORUS
   Dionysus, O Dionysus, he’s the one with power over me—
   not Thebes.
SECOND MESSENGER
That you may be forgiven, but to cry aloud with joy when such disasters come, women, that's not something you should do.  [1040]

CHORUS
Speak to me, tell all—
How did death strike him down,
that unrighteous man,
that man who acted so unjustly?  1300

SECOND MESSENGER
Once we'd left the settlements of Thebes,
we went across the river Asopus,
then started the climb up Mount Cithaeron—Pentheus and myself, I following the king.
The stranger was our guide, scouting the way.
First, we sat down in a grassy meadow,
keeping our feet and tongues quite silent,
so we could see without being noticed.
There was a valley there shut in by cliffs.
Through it refreshing waters flowed, with pines providing shade. The maenads sat there, their hands all busy with delightful work—
some of them with ivy strands repairing damaged thyrsoi, while others sang, chanting Bacchic songs to one another,
carefree as fillies freed from harnesses.
Then Pentheus, that unhappy man,
not seeing the crowd of women, spoke up, “Stranger, I can’t see from where we’re standing.
My eyes can’t glimpse those crafty maenads.
But up there, on that hill, a pine tree stands.
If I climbed that, I might see those women,
and witness the disgraceful things they do.”
Then I saw that stranger work a marvel.
He seized that pine tree's topmost branch—
it stretched up to heaven—and brought it down, pulling it to the dark earth, bending it as if it were a bow or some curved wheel forced into a circle while staked out with pegs—that’s how the stranger made that tree bend down, forcing the mountain pine to earth by hand, something no mortal man could ever do. He set Pentheus in that pine tree’s branches. Then his hands released the tree, but slowly, so it stood up straight, being very careful not to shake Pentheus loose. So that pine towered straight up to heaven, with my king perched on its back. Maenads could see him there more easily than he could spy on them.

As he was just becoming visible—the stranger had completely disappeared—some voice—I guess it was Dionysus—cried out from the sky, “Young women, I’ve brought you the man who laughed at you, who ridiculed my rites. Now punish him!” As he shouted this, a dreadful fire arose, blazing between the earth and heaven. The air was still. In the wooded valley no sound came from the leaves, and all the beasts were silent, too. The women stood up at once. They’d heard the voice, but not distinctly. They gazed around them. Then again the voice shouted his commands. When Cadmus’ daughters clearly heard what Dionysus ordered, they rushed out, running as fast as doves, moving their feet at an amazing speed. His mother Agave with both her sisters and all the Bacchae charged straight through the valley, the torrents, the mountain cliffs, pushed to a god-inspired frenzy. They saw the king there sitting in that pine. First, they scaled a cliff face looming up opposite the tree and started throwing rocks, trying to hurt him. Others threw branches, or hurled their thyrsoi through the air at him, sad, miserable Pentheus, their target. But they didn’t hit him. The poor man sat high beyond their frenzied cruelty, trapped up there, no way to save his skin. Then, like lightning, they struck oak branches down, trying them as levers to uproot the tree.
When these attempts all failed, Agave said,
"Come now, make a circle round the tree.
Then, maenads, each of you must seize a branch,
so we can catch the climbing beast up there,
stop him making our god’s secret dances known."
Thousands of hands grabbed the tree and pulled.
They yanked it from the ground. Pentheus fell, crashing to earth down from his lofty perch, screaming in distress. He knew well enough something dreadful was about to happen.
His priestess mother first began the slaughter.
She hurled herself at him. Pentheus tore off his headband, untying it from his head,
so wretched Agave would recognize him,
so she wouldn’t kill him. Touching her cheek,
he cried out, “It’s me, mother, Pentheus, your child. You gave birth to me at home, in Echion’s house. Pity me, mother—don’t kill your child because I’ve made mistakes.”
But Agave was foaming at the mouth, eyes rolling in their sockets, her mind not set on what she ought to think—she didn’t listen—
she was possessed, in a Bacchic frenzy.
She seized his left arm, below the elbow, pushed her foot against the poor man’s ribs, then tore his shoulder out. The strength she had—it was not her own. The god put power into those hands of hers. Meanwhile Ino, her sister, went at the other side,
ripping off chunks of Pentheus’s flesh,
while Autonoe and all the Bacchae,
the whole crowd of them, attacked as well,
all of the women howling out together.
As long as Pentheus was still alive,
he kept on screaming. The women cried in triumph—one brandished an arm, another held a foot—complete with hunting boot—the women’s nails tore his ribs apart. Their hands grew bloody, tossing bits of flesh back and forth, for fun.
His body parts lie scattered everywhere—
some under rough rocks, some in the forest, deep in the trees. They’re difficult to find.
As for the poor victim’s head, his mother stumbled on it. Her hands picked it up, then stuck it on a thyrsus, at the tip.
Now she carries it around Cithaeron,
as though it were some wild lion’s head.
She’s left her sisters dancing with the maenads.
She’s coming here, inside these very walls,
showing off with pride her ill-fated prey,
calling out to her fellow hunter, Bacchus,
his companion in the chase, the winner,
the glorious victor. By serving him,
in her great triumph she wins only tears.
As for me, I’m leaving this disaster,
before Agave gets back home again.
The best thing is to keep one’s mind controlled,
and worship all that comes down from the gods.
That, in my view, is the wisest custom,
for those who can conduct their lives that way.

[Exit Messenger.]

CHORUS
Let’s dance to honour Bacchus, Let’s shout to celebrate what’s happened here,
happened to Pentheus,
child of the serpent,
who put on women’s clothes,
who took up the beautiful and blessed thyrsus—
his certain death,
disaster brought on by the bull.
You Bacchic women descended from old Cadmus, you’ve won glorious victory,
one which ends in tears,
which ends in lamentation.
A noble undertaking this,
to drench one’s hands in blood,
life blood dripping from one’s only son.
CHORUS LEADER
  Wait! I see Agave, Pentheus’ mother, on her way home, her eyes transfixed.
Let’s now welcome her,
the happy revels of our god of joy!

[Enter Agave, cradling the head of Pentheus.]

AGAVE
  Asian Bacchae . . .

CHORUS
  Why do you appeal to me?

AGAVE [displaying the head]
  From the mountains I’ve brought home this ivy tendril freshly cut.
  We’ve had a blessed hunt.

CHORUS
  I see it.
  As your fellow dancer, I’ll accept it.

AGAVE
  I caught this young lion without a trap,
as you can see.

CHORUS
  What desert was he in?

AGAVE
  Cithaeron.

CHORUS
  On Cithaeron?

AGAVE
  Cithaeron killed him.

CHORUS
  Who struck him down?
AGAVE
The honour of the first blow goes to me.
In the dancing I’m called blessed Agave. [n80]

CHORUS
Who else?

AGAVE
Well, from Cadmus . . .

CHORUS
From Cadmus what?

AGAVE
His other children laid hands on the beast, but after me—only after I did first.
We’ve had good hunting. So come, share our feast.

CHORUS
What? You want me to eat that with you?
O you unhappy woman!

AGAVE
This is a young bull. Look at this cheek It’s just growing downy under the crop of his soft hair. 1470

CHORUS
His hair makes him resemble some wild beast.

AGAVE
Bacchus is a clever huntsman—
he wisely set his maenads on this beast. [n90]

CHORUS
Yes, our master is indeed a hunter.

AGAVE
Have you any praise for me?
BACCHAE

CHORUS

I praise you.

AGAVE

Soon all Cadmus’ people. . .

CHORUS

. . . and Pentheus, your son . . .

AGAVE

. . . will celebrate his mother, who caught the beast, just like a lion.

CHORUS

It’s a strange trophy.

AGAVE

And strangely captured, too.

CHORUS

You’re proud of what you’ve done?

AGAVE

Yes, I’m delighted. Great things I’ve done—great things on this hunt, clear for all to see.

CHORUS

Well then, you most unfortunate woman, show off your hunting prize, your sign of victory,
to all the citizens.

AGAVE [addressing everyone]

All of you here,
all you living in the land of Thebes,
in this city with its splendid walls,
come see this wild beast we hunted down—
daughters of Cadmus—not with thonged spears, Thessalian javelins, or by using nets,
but with our own white hands, our finger tips.

After this, why should huntsmen boast aloud,
when no one needs the implements they use?
We caught this beast by hand, tore it apart—
with our own hands. But where’s my father?
He should come here. And where’s Pentheus?
Where is my son? He should take a ladder, set it against the house, fix this lion’s head way up there, high on the palace front.
I’ve captured it and brought it home with me.

[Enter Cadmus and attendants, carrying parts of Pentheus’s body.]

CADMUS
Follow me, all those of you who carry some part of wretched Pentheus. You slaves, come here, right by the house.

[They place the bits of Pentheus’ body together in a chest front of the palace.]

I’m worn out.
So many searches—but I picked up the body.
I came across it in the rocky clefts on Mount Cithaeron, ripped to pieces,
no parts lying together in one place.
It was in the woods—difficult to search.
Someone told me what my daughter did,
those horrific acts, once I’d come back,
returning here with old Tiresias,
inside the city walls, back from the Bacchae.
So I climbed the mountains once again.
Now I bring home this child the maenads killed.
I saw Autonoe, who once bore Actaeon to Aristeius—and Ino,
she was with her there, in the forest,
both still possessed, quite mad, poor creatures.
Someone said Agave was coming here,
still doing her Bacchic dance. He spoke the truth, for I see her there—what a wretched sight!

AGAVE
Father, now you can be truly proud.
Among all living men you’ve produced by far the finest daughters. I’m talking of all of us, but mostly of myself. I’ve left behind my shuttle and my loom, and risen to great things, catching wild beasts with my bare hands. Now I’ve captured him, I’m holding in my arms the finest trophy, as you can see, bringing it back home to you, so it may hang here.

[offering him Pentheus’ head]

Take this, father
let your hands welcome it. Be proud of it, of what I’ve caught. Summon all your friends— have a banquet, for you are blessed indeed, blessed your daughters have achieved these things.

CADMUS
This grief’s beyond measure, beyond endurance. With these hands of yours you’ve murdered him. You strike down this sacrificial victim, this offering to the gods, then invite me, and all of Thebes, to share a banquet. Alas—first for your sorrow, then my own. Lord god Bromius, born into this family, has destroyed us, acting out his justice, but too much so.

AGAVE
Why such scowling eyes? How sorrowful and solemn old men become. As for my son, I hope he’s a fine hunter, who copies his mother’s hunting style, when he rides out with young men of Thebes chasing after creatures in the wild. The only thing he seems capable of doing is fighting with the gods. It’s up to you, father, to reprimand him for it. Who’ll call him here into my sight, so he can see my good luck for himself?
BACCHAE

CADMUS
   Alas! Alas! What dreadful pain you'll feel when you recognize what you've just done. [1260]
   If you stay forever in your present state, you'll be unfortunate, but you won't feel as if you're suffering unhappiness.

AGAVE
   But what in all this is wrong or painful?

CADMUS
   First, raise your eyes. Look up into the sky. [1560]

AGAVE
   All right. But why tell me to look up there?

CADMUS
   Does the sky still seem the same to you, or has it changed?

AGAVE
   It seems, well, brighter . . . more translucent than it was before.

CADMUS
   And your inner spirit—is it still shaking?

AGAVE
   I don't understand what it is you're asking. But my mind is starting to clear somehow. It's changing . . . it's not what it was before. [1270]

CADMUS
   Can you hear me? Can you answer clearly?

AGAVE
   Yes. But, father, what we discussed before, I've quite forgotten. [1570]

CADMUS
   Then tell me this—to whose house did you come when you got married?
You gave me to Echion, who, men say, was one of those who grew from seeds you cast.

In that house you bore your husband a child. What was his name?

His name was Pentheus. I conceived him with his father.

Well then, this head your hands are holding—who is it?

It’s a lion’s. That’s what the hunters said.

Inspect it carefully. You can do that without much effort.

What is this? What am I looking at? What am I holding?

Look at it. You’ll understand more clearly.

What I see fills me with horrific pain... such agony...

Does it still seem to you to be a lion’s head?

No. It’s appalling—this head I’m holding belongs to Pentheus.
CADMUS
    Yes, that’s right. I was lamenting his fate before you recognized him.

AGAVE
    Who killed him?
    How did he come into my hands?

CADMUS
    Harsh truth—
    how you come to light at the wrong moment.

AGAVE
    Tell me. My heart is pounding in me to hear what you’re about to say.

CADMUS
    You killed him—
    you and your sisters.

AGAVE
    Where was he killed?
    At home? In what sort of place?

CADMUS
    He was killed
    where dogs once made a common meal of Actaeon.

AGAVE
    Why did this poor man go to Cithaeron?

CADMUS
    He went there to ridicule the god and you for celebrating Dionysus.

AGAVE
    But how did we happen to be up there?

CADMUS
    You were all insane—the entire city was in a Bacchic madness.
AGAVE
Now I see.
Dionysus has destroyed us all.

CADMUS
He took offense at being insulted.
You did not consider him a god.

AGAVE
Father, where’s the body of my dearest son?

CADMUS
I had trouble tracking down the body.
I brought back what I found.

AGAVE
Are all his limbs laid out just as they should be? And Pentheus, what part did he play in my madness?

CADMUS
Like you, he was irreverent to the god.
That’s why the god linked you and him together in the same disaster—thus destroying the house and me, for I’ve no children left,
now I see this offspring of your womb,
you unhappy woman, cruelly butchered in the most shameful way. He was the one who brought new vision to our family.

[Addressing the remains of Pentheus]

My child, you upheld the honour of our house, my daughter’s son. You were feared in Thebes.
No one who saw you ever would insult me, though I was old, for you would then inflict fit punishment. Now the mighty Cadmus, the man who sowed and later harvested
the most splendid crop—the Theban people—will be an exile, banished from his home,
a dishonoured man. Dearest of men, even though, my child, you’re alive no more, I count you among those closest to me. You won’t be touching my cheek any more, holding me in your arms, and calling me “grandfather,” as you ask me, “Old man, who’s injuring or dishonouring you? Who upsets your heart with any pain? Tell me, father, so I can punish him— anyone who treats you in an unjust way.” Now you’re in this horrifying state, I’m in misery, your mother’s pitiful, and all your relatives are in despair. If there’s a man who disrespects the gods, let him think about how this man perished— then he should develop faith in them.

CHORUS LEADER
I’m sorry for you Cadmus—you’re in pain. But your grandson deserved his punishment.

AGAVE
Father, you see how all has changed for me.1 [From being your royal and honoured daughter, the mother of a king, I’m now transformed— an abomination, something to fill all people’s hearts with horror, with disgust— the mother who slaughtered her only son, who tore him apart, ripping out the heart from the child who filled her own heart with joy— all to honour this god Dionysus. But, father, give me your permission now to lay out here the body of my son, prepare his corpse for proper burial.

CADMUS
That’s no easy task to undertake. His body, all the parts I could collect, lies here, in this chest, not a pretty sight.

1At this point, there is a major gap in the manuscript. The text here is reconstructed from what we know or surmise about the content of the missing portion.
My own eyes can hardly bear to see him.
But if you think you can endure the work,
then, my child, begin the appropriate rites.

AGAVE [starting to lay out Pentheus’s body parts]
Alas, for my poor son, my only child, destroyed by his mother’s Bacchic madness.
How could these hands of mine, which loved him so,
have torn these limbs apart, ripped out his flesh.
Here’s an arm which has held me all these years,
growing stronger as he grew into a man,
his feet . . . O how he used to run to me,
seeking assurance of his mother’s love.
His face was handsome, on the verge of manhood.
See the soft down still resting on these lips,
which have kissed me thousands of times or more.
All this, and all the rest, set here before us.
O Zeus and all you Olympian gods . . .

[She cannot complete the ritual and collapses in grief.]
It makes no sense—it’s unendurable.
How could the god have wished such things on me?

CHORUS LEADER [helping Agave get up]
Lady, you must bear what cannot be borne.
Your suffering is intense, but the god is just.
You insulted him in Thebes, showed no respect—you’ve brought the punishment upon yourself.

CHORUS
What is wisdom? What is finer
than the rights men get from gods—
to hold their powerful hands
over the heads of their enemies?
Ah yes, what’s good is always loved.
So all praise Dionysus, praise the dancing god,
god of our revelry,
god whose justice is divine,
whose justice now reveals itself.
[Enter Dionysus.]

DIONYSUS

Yes, I am Dionysus, son of Zeus.
You see me now before you as a god.
You Thebans learned about my powers too late.
Dishonouring me, you earn the penalty.
You refused my rites. Now you must leave—abandon your city for barbarian lands.
Agave, too, that polluted creature,
must go into perpetual banishment.
And Cadmus, you too must endure your lot.]

Your form will change, so you become a serpent.
Your wife, Harmonia, Ares’ daughter, whom you, though mortal, took in marriage,
will be transformed, changing to a snake.
As Zeus’s oracle declares, you and she will drive a chariot drawn by heifers.
You’ll rule barbarians. With your armies, too large to count, you’ll raze many cities.
Once they despoil Apollo’s oracle,
they’ll have a painful journey back again.
But Ares will guard you and Harmonia.

In lands of the blessed he’ll transform your lives.
That’s what I proclaim—I, Dionysus, born from no mortal father, but from Zeus.
If you had understood how to behave
as you should have when you were unwilling, you’d now be fortunate, with Zeus’s child
among your allies.

CADMUS

O Dionysus,
we implore you—we’ve not acted justly.

DIONYSUS

You learn too late. You were ignorant when you should have known.

'The gap in the original manuscript ends here, and the Greek text resumes.
BACCHAE

CADMUS
Now we understand. Your actions against us are too severe.

DIONYSUS
I was born a god, and you insulted me.

CADMUS
Angry gods should not act just like humans.

DIONYSUS
My father Zeus willed all this long ago.

AGAVE
Alas, old man, then this must be our fate, a miserable exile.

DIONYSUS
Why then delay? Why postpone what necessity requires?

CADMUS
Child, we’ve stumbled into this disaster, this terrible calamity—you and me, both in agony—your sisters, too. So I’ll go out to the barbarians, a foreign resident in my old age. And then for me there’s that oracle which says I’ll lead a mixed barbarian force back into Greece. And I’ll bring here with me Harmonia, Ares’ daughter, my wife. I’ll have the savage nature of a snake, as I lead my soldiers to the altars, to the tombs, in Greece. But even then, there’ll be no end to my wretched sorrows. I’ll never sail the downward plunging Acheron and reach some final peace.

AGAVE [embracing Cadmus] Father, I must be exiled without you.
CADMUS
   Why do you throw your arms about me, my unhappy child, just like some young swan protecting an old one—gray and helpless.

AGAVE
   Because I’ve no idea where to go, once I’m banished from my father’s land.

CADMUS
   Child, I don’t know. Your father’s not much help.

AGAVE
   Farewell, then, to my home.               1750
   Farewell to my native city.
   In my misfortune I abandon you,
   an exile from spaces once my own.          [1370]

CADMUS
   Go now to Aristeus’ house, my child.¹

AGAVE
   How I grieve for you, my father.

CADMUS
   And I grieve for you, my child,
   as I weep for your sisters.

AGAVE
   Lord Dionysus has inflicted such brutal terror on your house.

DIONYSUS
   Yes. For at your hands I suffered, too—   1760 and dreadfully. For here in Thebes my name received no recognition.

AGAVE
   Farewell, father.

¹Aristeus was the husband of Autonoe and father of Actaeon.
CADMUS
   My most unhappy daughter, may you fare well. That will be hard for you.          [1380]

AGAVE
   Lead on, friends, so I may take my sisters,
   those pitiful women, into exile with me.
   May I go somewhere where cursed Cithaeron will never see me, nor my eyes glimpse that dreadful mountain, a place far away from any sacred thyrsus. Let others make Bacchic celebrations their concern.               1770

[Exit Agave.]

CHORUS
   The gods appear in many forms, carrying with them unwelcome things.
   What people thought would happen never did.
   What they did not expect, the gods made happen.
   That’s what this story has revealed.

[Exeunt Chorus and Cadmus, leaving on stage the remains of Pentheus’s body.]
A NOTE ON THE TRANSLATOR

Ian Johnston is a retired instructor (now a Research Associate) at Vancouver Island University, Nanaimo, British Columbia, Canada. His translations include the following:

Aeschylus, Oresteia Aristophanes, Birds
Aristophanes, Clouds
Aristophanes, Frogs
Aristophanes, Knights
Aristophanes, Lysistrata
Aristophanes, Peace

Cuvier, Discourse on Revolutionary Upheavals on the Surface of the Earth
Descartes, Discourse on Method
Euripides, Bacchae
Euripides, Medea
Euripides, Orestes

Homer, Iliad (Complete and Abridged)
Homer, Odyssey (Complete and Abridged)

Kant, Universal Natural History and Theory of the Heavens
Kant, On Perpetual Peace

Lucretius, The Nature of Things
Nietzsche, Beyond Good and Evil
Nietzsche, Birth of Tragedy
Nietzsche, Genealogy of Morals
Nietzsche, Uses and Abuses of History

Sophocles, Ajax
Sophocles, Antigone
Sophocles, Oedipus the King
Sophocles, Philoctetes

A number of these translations have been published by Richer Resources Publications, and some of these titles are available as recordings from Naxos Audiobooks.

Ian Johnston maintains a website at the following address:

http://johnstoniatexts.x10host.com/

For comments and questions, please contact Ian Johnston (at the following address johnstoi.ian@gmail.com).